CHICKEN HOUSE 01373 454488 www.chickenhousebooks.com

An extract from

THE SPELLBOUND TREE

Mikki Lish & Kelly Ngai

The Whisper took a seat on the edge of one of the planter boxes in the square, stroking his chin. 'The sword belongs to one known as the King of Hearts. He is one of three stewards who pledged to protect the tree that is the fountainhead of magic. The Spellbound Tree.'

'What does "fountainhead" mean?' Max asked. As the Whisper had begun talking to them, Max must have grown more at ease for the sword had retracted out of sight.

'Source. It's the source of magic,' he replied.

'One tree is the source of magic?'

'In a sense. Just as a river can be traced back to a stream, and that stream can be traced back to a spring that starts its life as a trickle among some rocks. It is no ordinary tree, of course. In some ways it is only posing as a tree, so that our small minds may comprehend it. Perhaps its true form is actually something different. Well, in an earlier age, it was decided that the tree needed protecting. Magic was endangered, you see by a war between magicians and non-magicians.'

Hedy and the others nodded. They'd all learnt about this old conflict on their last adventure.

'The fighting came to an end when, on the verge of annihilation, magicians promised to work in the shadows.'

'The Pact,' said Hedy.

'Indeed, when the Pact was agreed to, the three stewards were forced to give up their weapons to keep their power in check. In these times, you would think of it as a magician surrendering his or her wand. The King of Hearts gave up his sword. The Queen of Spades relinquished her sceptre. The Knight of Clubs, his arrow. Unarmed, they would care for the Spellbound Tree to keep it just as it was, but they could not nurture it to make it grow stronger. Something is different now, though. Something is wrong with the Spellbound Tree. For weeks, magicians the world over have been sharing stories of magic going wrong. Even my magic is imperfect - your friend was left behind on the other side of the wall. The tree must be cured.'

'What happens if it isn't cured?' Max asked. 'Will I be stuck with this on my hand for ever, or will it finally come off?'

He bent low to bring his face level with Max's. 'Young man, a world without magic is what will happen. Is that what you want?'

'Of course not,' said Spencer. 'None of us want that.'

A rogue thought strayed into Hedy's mind: A world without magic would be a world without a whole heap of problems.

DESCRIPTION

When their magician grandpa is imprisoned in a snow globe, Hedy and Spencer - with cousins Jelly and Max - go in search of a magical way to free him in the final instalment of the House on Hoarder Hill trilogy. The Spellbound Tree is the source of all magic, but to find it the talented children must fight their way through the catacombs of Paris, with the help and hindrance of ghosts and monsters.

An extract from

THE GIRL OF INK & STARS

Kiran Millwood Hargrave

When I reached our house, I could barely breathe. The door was wide open, and the flowerpot by the door was tipped over, spilling earth and daisies. That stopped me short. The panic that had driven me up the hill was now holding me back.

‘Da?’

Nothing.

I stepped forward.

‘Da!’

The sunlight sent patterns whirling across my eyes in the gloom. I blinked them to a stop.

Da was not in the main room. It was the same as when I had left, the bowl of burnt porridge uneaten on its bed of maps. The walls swayed lightly – because of the maps or my spinning head I did not know. Only the forest-green jug had been moved back on to its shelf.

A rustle came from Da’s study and relief filled me like air. That was typical of Da, too busy with work to hear me. He probably wouldn’t even know what was going on outside. I crossed to the thick curtain and pulled it aside.

‘Da—’

The shutters were open, letting through a breeze that lightly lifted the papers covering his desk. This must have been what I heard, because his stool was empty. Staining the parchment on the desk was something shiny.

Unable to stop myself, I reached out to touch it. It was wet. My fingers were red. I felt the room spooling away, my mind filling with dark.

Each of us carries the map of our lives on our skin . . .

Da’s voice. Why was he speaking like that – cold, slow?

See here, how my blood runs not blue at my wrist, but black?

And why did I know exactly what he was going to say next?

Your mother always said it was ink. I am a cartographer through to my heart.

Da was ahead of me, walking through a dark channel of houses that swayed in the wind like trees. Now they were trees, and Da was stretching his hand towards me, redness flooding his palm. His chest was a bloody mess of skin and feathers, black feathers, like the ravens Pep caught.

My heart . . .

I was dreaming. Dream-Da was walking towards me, his face blank. I wrenched my chest from the hot ground, pulling myself backwards, away from him, along the stretching line of trees, out of the dream.
