An extract from

MONSTER BOGEY

Anna Brooke

Have you ever picked your nose?

Don't lie now.

I bet you have. I haven't, of course. I would never do anything revolting like that.

But I bet you have. And that's okay, because if you have, you can be friends with Frank.

Here he is: a skinny, freckly boy with spiky red hair and his finger up his nozzle.

His full name is Frank Bear Horace Pickerty-Boop, but for the sake of this story, we'll just call him Frank.

Frank lived on the edge of Honkerty Village in his ancestral home, Snuzzlehill House, a spooky-looking mansion with a rickety bell tower, a gloopy green moat and cross-eyed gargoyles with dribbling chops.

It sounds grand, but it wasn't.

His Mum and Dad couldn't afford to live in the whole building, so the family lived in the West Wing, in two tiny bedrooms, a teensy lounge with a teeny kitchen, and a tiddly bathroom with a toilet that did a little burp when it flushed. Bruupp! The East Wing lay empty, except for old furniture, dangerous potholes, dusty paintings of Pinkerty-Boop's ancestors, and spiders that sang cabaret. And it was strictly OFF LIMITS to Frank.

So, as I was saying, Frank was a nose-picker, though he never ate his bogeys (for that would be really disgusting). Instead he rolled them into little balls and saved them in his pocket until he got home from school. Then, when no one was looking, he emptied them into his bogey cupboard in his bedroom.

Not even his Mum or Dad knew about the cupboard. They HATED bogeys. And over time, Frank had piled so many bogeys, he had a big bogey tower ...

75 centimetres ...

81 centimetres ...

97 centimetres ...

Frank was aiming for a metre.

This is Tiffany, Frank's best friend. She has tight, curly brown ringlets and stick-outy ears.

Frank and Tiffany did everything together. She was the only other person in the entire world to know about the tower and the cupboard. But she didn't collect bogeys. She loved animals and collected slugs, and dreamed about one day setting up her own slug circus act. She carried four pet ones around with her in a jar.

Here they are: Sammy, Violet, Peach and Slim.

Every day after school the friends played together in Frank's bedroom until tea time, setting agility courses for the slugs and collecting lovely trails of slug-goo, perfect for holding the bogey tower together. It was funny, but the bigger the tower got, the more it looked like a little man.

DESCRIPTION

Frank has a secret: he picks his nose. And, worse, he saves his bogeys. But GOOLIEMALLOOLIE, he did NOT deserve this! Struck by lightning, his tower of greenies comes alive, turning into a terrifying bogey monster that escapes into the night. Now Frank and his best friend Tiffany – and her four heroic slugs – must catch the creature before the villagers of Honkerty find out ... A right slimer of a tale by debut talent Anne Brooke.

An extract from

WILDOAK

C. C. Harrington

Maggie struggled to cross the stream without dropping anything. The bridge across was little more than a narrow plank, and she nearly slipped. Once across, she filled the bucket and half-ran, half-walked as quickly as she could back into the forest. Her own hand was still sore, and now it throbbed from the pressure of carrying such a heavy load. She was sweating by the time she got to her hat and turned off the path.

The cat had not moved.

His eyes were still closed.

Her heart thumped.

'I've come back for you,' she said. 'I'm going to get you out of this thing, I swear I am.'

Maggie ran her fingers over the top and sides of the trap. But where to cut? Where? She followed the lines of steel along the handle and found a coiled spring. Was it the spring that was keeping the jaws of the trap closed? It must be. She picked up the cutters with her bare hands. They were long and unwieldy but came apart easily. Gripping as best she could, she positioned the blades around the only part of the spring coil that was narrow enough. She pressed down hard, harder still.

Come on! PLEASE.

Nothing.

She tried again, straining every muscle in both forearms, putting the weight of her shoulders and upper back into it, pressing down again and again. But the cutters barely made a dent in the rusted steel. She kept trying. She pressed with all her might. Her cheeks turned red. But no matter how hard she tried, the steel coil remained intact.

In a fit of anger, Maggie threw the cutters away.

The cat still had not moved.

'Don't give up on me,' she whispered. She got back down on her hands and knees. There must be a way. Her mind spun in circles. How would a hunter get it off? She reached forward and tried again to understand how the trap worked, the mechanics of it. If only Fred was nearby, surely he would know.

Impatiently Maggie ran her finger along the handle and back again. 'It's just a spring,' she whispered. 'Right now it's extended. Think, Maggie. If there's a way to extend it, there must be a way to compress it again.' She studied the shape of it, the way the pieces all fitted together. 'What's that ring? It slides . . . there! THERE!' She shifted a small iron loop. 'Yes, come on!' Maggie pushed the loop as far as possible and slipped her fingers around the cold rusted metal. Then she squeezed the two handle rods like a pair of tongs. The jaws of the trap edged apart. She squeezed a little harder.

DESCRIPTION

1963. Maggie's stutter makes going to school unbearable. Nobody understands her, and her only friends are her pets. In a last attempt to 'cure' her, Maggie's parents send her to freezing Cornwall to stay with her grandfather, a doctor, whom she hardly knows. Here, she stumbles upon an abandoned young snow leopard in the woods, a discarded gift to a wealthy Londoner – too wild to domesticate. But once the cub's presence is discovered by others, danger follows ...

An extract from

GAME OVER GIRL

Naomi Gibson

Quicker than I could draw breath, a wave of static washed across the room. As it moved, plants sprouted in its wake. Tiny shrubs shot up from the floor, which was no longer marked by coloured lines. Now it was damp earth, rotting leaves. Leafy bushes erupted from it. Trees hurtled upwards until their tops towered over us. Sunlight spilt through the green canopy like water through a colander.

I staggered backwards and almost fell over a tree root that appeared from nowhere.

Dr Zats stepped from behind a bush with a smile. 'Welcome to Better Than Life.'

'Holy shit.' It was exactly like being in a rainforest. How was this possible? Mother never let us have phones or a computer. I had no idea games could be so . . . real. I thought they were played on a screen or involved a controller. This was exactly like being there.

There were plants and flowers I'd never seen before. The light was a colour I didn't know it could be. Unseen monkeys called to each other, and a snake hissed in the nearby undergrowth.

I sniffed at the air. Old socks and unwashed floors.

'It still smells like the gym.'

'We're working on smells,' Dr Zats said quickly, and tapped at her tablets. 'I'll set its priority higher.'

'What's the aim of the game?' I asked.

'Pure creation.' Dr Zats gestured at the plants around her. 'Try making something – you have to really picture it in your mind and the Key will bring it to life. Start simple, a piece of fruit perhaps. Let's try an apple.'

A is for Apple

I could hear my speech therapist as she waved a picture card at me. Could see its image in my mind's eye. A light-pink background with a shiny apple on it. Half green, half red, a strip of light reflecting off the waxy skin, a single leaf curling from its stalk.

I looked down and the apple was in my hand. 'OW!' My hand flew to my temple, to my Key. It was as if a needle had jabbed me in the skull. I looked up at Dr Zats in shock. 'What was that?'

She raised an eyebrow. 'Did you create that apple from a memory?'

'Yeah, it's from . . . never mind.' I rubbed my head. The pain had gone but it had come so quickly, so suddenly, it had knocked me off balance.

'I was going to tell you, only I didn't think you would need to know for that first exercise. It's unusual that you would . . . anyway, you shouldn't create anything from real life. People, or places. Don't recreate things from your memory.' The apple was exactly how I remembered. It was like it had been lifted from the flash card and put into my hands. I examined the traitorous apple, wondering why such a simple thing could have hurt me so much.

DESCRIPTION

Lola's selected to test a VR game at her new boarding school – Better Than Life. The only rule? Don't create real people, places, or memories. But Lola breaks the rule, building a version of the house she left behind in mysterious circumstances. In her game, her life is perfect. Soon she's skipping lessons to play. But there's a secret hidden in the basement of her VR house – and no matter how hard she tries to keep it locked away, dark memories start to surface. This is a game she can't win ...

Along the journey, unforgettable images of adventure flash one after another before Peter realises that the adventure is really a nightmare: sleeping in a tent and then under the sky, discovering a disused brick factory, catching butterflies in the meadows, watching bombs falling from the blue sky outside Vienna, learning to count from his mother in Belsen. All this is drawn against a background of terror, starvation, infection and his father's and grandmother's deaths.
