NAKAMA

---- Japanese -----

Friends who are like family lapanese people are not likely to be casual friends. The ideas of soto (outside) and uchi (inside) are important social concepts in Japan. Working your way up from soto to uchi takes a long time and involves a lot of give and take.

The traditional form of greeting in Japan is a bow.
The lower you bow, the more respect you are showing.

Japan has more elderly people than anywhere else in the world, with over 26% of the population being older than 65.
Old people are highly respected in Japan and at mealtimes are served their food and drink first.

Japan has 5.6 million vending machines on its streets, selling everything from cooked pizza to underwear to raw eggs!

Icelandic ----

Weather that looks beautiful while you're inside, but is much too cold when you step outside

This word literally means 'window-weather' because it is best enjoyed inside the house.

All that window-weather has created a notion of writers and bookworms. Iceland has more writers, more books published and more books read, per head, than anywhere else in the world.

An amazing 10% of Icelanders will publish a book in their lifetime!
