The tide comes in, helping giant turtles to the shore.

Leatherback turtles haul themselves out of the water in the darkness, dig nests in the sand and they lay their eggs there, sheltered from the tide.

They rarely leave the open sea. These fast, powerful swimmers travel the world's oceans.

Suddenly a billion microscopic creatures rise up from the depths.

This is the biggest migration on the planet, and it takes place every night. At dawn, they return to the deep.

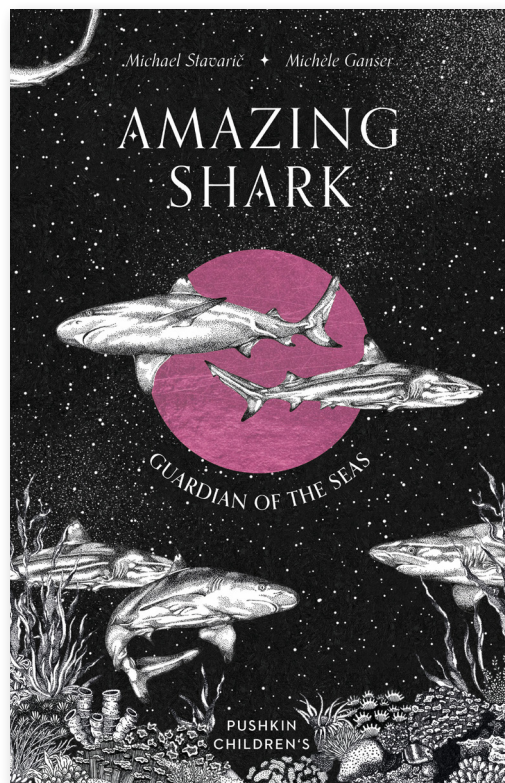

These tiny creatures are only a millimeter or two across. They come in all sorts of colors and some of them glow in the dark. Together they make up what is known as plankton.
